Top daily planner android app

It's no surprise that being organized is directly linked to productivity. Whether you're a die-hard to do lists, someone who lives and dies off their paper calendar, or just needs to get all your events, tasks and work project deadlines in one place, finding the best task organization tools for you can be a daunting task. While you may be tempted to pick up another old-fashioned paper office planner — and let's be honest, get it to collect dust in a drawer again — consider upgrading to a planner app instead. These apps replace a traditional office planner and keep to-do lists, calendars, and scheduling at your fingertips— right on your smartphone. Read on for our favorite DIY, calendar and general scheduling apps and get ready to get organized. Courtesy of the Apple App Store Sign Up Now An iOS app that organizes to do list by category, things 3 make it easy to keep order and, as the name suggests, in addition to things. With a clean design, interactive checklist (who doesn't love to cross anything from the list?), and a simple drag-and-drop interface, Things 3 is the perfect planning tool for those who want to download an app and start using it immediately without the complicated processes or how-tos required. The app also lets you create headings in your task lists, making it easy to stay on the task and get the list without being distracted by other locations. This feature can also help you stay on track if your mind tends to wander. After all, did you know that those who multitactic are actually less productive? One drawback of thing 3 is the price tag - it's one of the more expensive options. But sometimes you get what you pay for. It is also only available on Apple devices, so Android users need to find an option. Courtesy of Apple App Store Sign Up Now you don't need to be a Gmail follower to use Google Calendar. This classic calendar app offers daily, weekly and monthly views, with a seamless switch between them. The search option is another great tool, for when you don't quite remember when your last dental appointment was. You can also set reminders, which, for perennial forgetful, are a must. While avid Gmail users are likely to benefit most from this app, since events mentioned in your email (think dinner plans, hotel reservations, and flight times) are automatically populated to your calendar, it's still a solid choice. Another plus? You can share your Google Calendar with other users, making it a great tool for multi-user households. Courtesy of Google Play Store Sign Up Now Are you someone who needs an overview of all your daily doses before you can start plugging away? Do you benefit from a functional yet beautiful tool? Then ZenDay is the app for you. With a soothing, floating timeline, you can null on your first task, but also see what you need to focus on next. As the name implies, ZenDay is meant to help promote a sense of zen as you approach the to-do list. The app's interface is with a 3D display that scrolls when you complete tasks. The app also has a color coding feature, which makes almost overdue items a different color, which helps you zero in on priority items and get caught up in an instant. Did you miss anything? Don't worry. ZenDay will automatically schedule these floating tasks. The app's debriefing feature is another big plus. It gives you an overview of how well you've completed tasks in time lately— a productivity level, if you like. Courtesy of apple app store Sign up Now Avid note-takers, this one is for you. AwesomeCalendar combines notes, calendar events, color coding and your local weather forecast, all in one handy tool. You can even add photos and stickers to individual events. Think: a Starbucks cup for a coffee date, a plane for your upcoming trip, even a colorful clothesline to mark laundry day. Adding photos and stickers to individual events is a great organizational tool. And it's fun. Sharing events with other users is also a snap. This app is compatible with lots of other calendar apps like iCloud, MobileMe, Google Calendar, Yahoo! Calendar, Microsoft Outlook, iCal and more. Once you've changed in AwesomeCalendar, it'll automatically appear in your other calendar apps. The same applies if you make a change in, let's say, Google Calendar. Your AwesomeCalendar shows that event as well. Another bonus? You can also check the weather via AwesomeCalendar. Great for those who often find themselves out and about - without umbrella. Courtesy of the Apple App Store Sign Up Now A calendar and anywhere in one, Any.do is ideal for those who need a comprehensive tool that covers tasks ranging from purchasing a birthday present to completing a work presentation. It's like the virtual version of ticking each item on the paper do-do list. Any.do is ideal for viewing both in the month and a closer daily list of action items. The app's double view shows your calendar at the top, and then a scroll list below of locations, events, and even overdue tasks. Tap an event, and a new window with location, time, invitees, and other details about the event will appear. Minimize and you're back to the main screen. Do you tend to download an organizational app, so forget to open it again? Any.do's home screen widget can help you keep track of tasks and events, and keep tasks and calendars top in mind. The app is also compatible with your other calendars — Google Calendar, iCloud, and Outlook. Courtesy of the Apple App Store Sign Up Now, Trello bills himself as the app that takes care of everything, and with good reason. This app, while it can be used alone, is best for team-work people. You can create do-do boards for everything from your personal, like planning your next vacation, to professionals, like making sure your next hit it out of the park. This tool also has an impressive list of business enthusiasts, from Kickstarter to Adobe to Google. But perhaps what is most about Trello is the simplicity of their boards, lists and cards. You've got enough on your plate. Trying to decipher your domap should not be one of them. Courtesy of Apple App Store Sign Up Now mac reply to Google calendar, Fantastical 2 (in its second iteration), is now a full app instead of a menu bar app. With this scheduling app, you can use natural language patterns to plan your events, and automatically recognize the location of your event and suggest invitees. It also has a widget on the home screen for easy use. Fantastic is also great for planning with a team of colleagues or even at home your spouse. Although you can switch between different calendars, it's not the coolest part of this scheduler app. Fantastical 2 also has location-based calendar visibility, which means it shows you the most relevant calendar based on your location. So no more spoiling game of thrones Sunday night ritual by stressing out over your jam-packed Monday meeting schedule. But be warned: it's also on the right side. Courtesy of Apple App Store Sign Up Now Yes, it's basic. But there's a reason it's a perennial favorite. The reminder app lets you keep an eye on all your doles across all your accounts, from iCloud to Yahoo! to Exchange. It also has compatibility with colleagues, so you can share your list, and they can tick things off when they're complete, too. What's it like for teamwork? Predictably, the tool's best function is the reminder function. Enter an alert when something in the list is due, or enter a time-based alert. You can even set location-based alerts. And let's face it: who hasn't been saved by a last-minute reminder of an upcoming credit card payment or family member's birthday? Courtesy of Apple App Store Sign Up Now Outlook, really? Yep, we're serious. Thanks to recent improvements, the email power plant now has a great planning and event tool. These features are in addition to the available email tools, from a priority inbox structure to accessibility sharing. It also has easy access to files, as well as swipe navigation and smart filters. On-the-go access to Word, Excel and PowerPoint files is another plus. A scheduler app is an app that helps you organize and keep all your organizational tools in one place, so you can access them from anywhere at any time. A scheduler app can replace your old paper planner and can store your name and contact information, calendars, appointment plans, and more. You can even create to-do lists and custom headings right in the app. A planner app is basically full of templates and empty calendars waiting to be filled in. You can enter your information or upload it from another source and get started using it right away. The app stores your information and organizes it, and can be customized to the organization style. The app can create reminders and alarms for important events and even sync calendars and devices. Planner apps vary in features features functions and therefore also in cost. There are several free scheduler apps, including basic calendar apps. There are also those who have a free basic version, but to access more features, you need to make in-app purchases. Other schedule apps are charged per team member and per month, usually around $11. Then there are more sophisticated apps that charge as much as $50. These are one-time purchase fees. If you're in a busy life and want to keep order, be more efficient and store everything in one digital home, a planner app is probably for you. Because there are so many free options and some smartphones have built-in scheduler apps, it may not be worth it to pay for the app. If you manage a team at work or have some specific organizational needs, it might be worth it to download a paid scheduler app instead of a free version. After examining all available scheduler apps, we selected the best candidates. We chose these as our best scheduler apps based on their features, device compatibility, integrations with other applications such as email, cost, ease of use and more. More.
